

GERMAN SAVINGS.

Chicago Daily Tribune (1872-1963); Sep 25, 1877; ProQuest Historical Newspapers Chicago Tribune (1849 - 1986)
pg. 7

GERMAN SAVINGS.

ALL QUIET AT GREENEHAUM'S.

A reporter for THE TRIBUNE went over to the German Savings-Bank yesterday afternoon, and found things in that institution unusually quiet. There was not a person outside the inclosure. Ex-Commissioner Hertling, Second Vice-President of the bank, met the journalist and greeted him cordially. He spoke enthusiastically of the condition of the institution, saying, among other things, that the Company had no mortgages out except from $1,000 to $5,000 on good city property, which was worth five times as much as the risks; they had no Calumet bonds, no railroad bonds, "no nothing" of that nature, and which they could not at any time go out upon the street and sell for cash. There was no run, he said; on the contrary, people were depositing some all the time. True, the panics and the runs upon other banks had hurt their concern somewhat, but he thought it was generally understood that the German Savings was a safe institution.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.