

THE VERDICT.

"The testimony is closed, gentlemen," said the Coroner, "unless you wish to hear from Mr. Greenebaum."

They didn't appear to have any longings that way.

The room was cleared, and the jury deliberated for the space of about five minutes. The doors were then thrown open, and the foreman read the verdict, which, stripped of the preliminary verbrage, was as follows:

That the said Theodore B. Weber, now lying dead at No. 274 North LaSalle street, in said City of Chicago, came to his death in said city from a pistol-shot wound inflicted by Mrs. Adelaide Robert, and we, the jury, recommend that she be held without bail to answer to the charge of murder to the Grand Jury of Cook County.

In a moment more the jury was discharged, and the room was soon deserted.

There was very little talk, if any, among the jury when deliberating as to the propriety of ringing in Henry Greenebaum, for the reason, as afterwards expressed by one of the good men and true, that they couldn't get him any way; that there was no showing for bringing him into the matter; that in short he was too remote for them to ever think of holding him.
